

Bill's Story

"I love how I get to meet people from all over the world and learn from different cultures."

tourism matters
San Diego
TourismMattersSD.org

Bill Trigueros

Bellman

Humphrey's Half Moon Inn

Share this story with your friends.

Bill Trigueros is a bellman at Humphrey's Half Moon Inn where he has been working since 1973. Originally from Guadalajara, Bill moved to San Diego in 1967 to join his family in California and begin his career in hospitality.

"I've worked in the San Diego hotel business for over 47 years," said Bill. "I love my job, particularly because I like talking to people. I love how I get to meet people from all over the world and learn from different cultures."

Bill decided to move to San Diego after taking a road trip from Houston, Texas to San Diego in 1965 with his grandfather. "I immediately fell in love with San Diego," said Bill. "It's a beautiful city, the people are friendly, it has great weather, and it's close to the border."

Bill has been the friendly face welcoming guests at the Humphrey's Half Moon Inn entrance for nearly half a century. A true enthusiast and ambassador of San Diego, he loves being a part of the tourism industry and is thankful for how tourism has given him and his wife, who also works in the hotel industry, a fulfilling, steady career and a connectedness to the world around him.

"My career in the hotel business has helped me support my family while giving me the opportunity to interact with people from all over the world. I am truly happy working at Humphrey's every single day."